Slowly turn, facing the audience,
with back to the pianist.

Watch violinist turn towards audience, then return gaze towards music, slowly turn the page, and begin the next section
while the cellist is still playing.

*Note durations apply to bow lengths only. In each measure the entire bow length should be used. A whole-note corresponds to an entire bow length; a half-note corresponds to half the bow length, etc. Actual note durations will depend on dynamics; therefore, the actual duration of each measure will vary accordingly. The violinist should play each note for as long as possible taking into consideration the length of bow to be used, dynamics, molto espressivo playing, and the creation of as beautiful a tone as possible.

The pianist must watch the violinist's bowings very closely. For example, the LH note in bar 1 will occur when the violinist has reached half the bow length, etc.

On pages 2-3 the violinist will continue playing in the same manner while the pianist plays in time. The violinist's attacks will be synchronized with the pianist's, but the releases will not as they will continue until the violinist has reached the end of the bow.
